

Work-life balance. Amazing career choices. Dwayne came to the right place.

Dwayne strives to balance work and his personal life. He also knows that there are two kinds of success — professional and personal. At the IRS, he's finally found an employer that agrees.

A career at the IRS is about more than just numbers. Here we're committed to giving our professionals the benefits and skills they need to excel — at work and at home. We figure that an important job should have important benefits. That's why we offer great insurance, continuous training, and a diverse team of colleagues. We're currently looking for talented professionals like Dwayne. And hopefully, like you — especially in one of the following positions:

Revenue Agents work on-site with taxpayers, large corporations, small businesses, government entities, certified public accountants and attorneys to conduct tax examinations.

Revenue Officers are involved in cases requiring tax research, interviews and investigations, analysis of financial statements and other important responsibilities.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

www.irs.gov

Criminal Investigation Special Agents protect the integrity of America's tax system by following the movement of money to determine and provide proof of criminal activity.

Be more than just a number at work. Learn more about an employer that cares about its people at www.jobs.irs.gov

It all adds up.

